To some thinkers, it is machines and their development that drive economic and cultural change. This idea is referred to as technological determinism. Certainly there can be no doubt that machines contributed to the Protestant Reformation and the decline of the Catholic Church's power in Europe or _____ (31) television has changed the way family members interact. Those who believe in technological determinism would argue that these changes in the cultural landscape were the _____ (32) result of new technology.

But others see technology as more neutral and claim that the way people use technology is what gives it significance. This _____ (33) accepts technology as one of many factors that shape economic and cultural change; technology's influence is _____ (34) determined by how much power it is given by the people and cultures that use it.

This _____ (35) about the power of technology is at the heart of the controversy surrounding the new communication technologies. Are we more or less powerless in the _____ (36) of advances such as the Internet, the World Wide Web, and instant global audio and visual communication? If we are at the mercy of technology, the culture that surrounds us will not be of our _____ (37), and the best we can hope to do is make our way reasonably well in a world outside our control. But if these technologies are indeed neutral and their power _____ (38) in how we choose to use them, we can utilize them responsibly and _____ (39) to construct and maintain whatever kind of culture we want. As film director and technophile Steve Spielberg explained, "Technology can be our best friend, and technology can also be the biggest party pooper of our lives. It interrupts our own story, interrupts our ability to have a thought or _____ (40), to image something wonderful".

II. Writing

Read carefully the following excerpt, then write your response in NO LESS THAN 200 WORDS, in which you should:

- 1) summarize the main message of the excerpt, and then

2) comment on Brewer's view that parents should join in with their kids rather than limit their media consumption.

You can support yourself with information from the excerpt

Marks will be awarded for content relevance, content sufficiency, organization and language quality. Failure to follow the above instructions may result in a loss of marks.

Write your response on ANSWER SHEET THREE.

How much screen time is too much for kids?

Parents have been advised to limit media consumption of their children, but research suggests it's the nature of it that matters.

For many parents in the digital age, battles with their kids over screen time and devices have become a depressing part of family life. Many parents will now be relieved to hear that recent research suggests that it's not so much the length, but the nature of the screen time that matters.

Jocelyn Brewer, a psychologist who specializes in the concept of "digital nutrition", likens media diets to what's on our plates: rather than counting calories (or screen time), think about what you're eating

"It's not just about whether you consume any potential digital junk foods, but also your relationship to technology and the role it plays in your family life," says Brewer.

For young children, the most important thing is whether parents and kids are playing, watching or browsing together.

A study of 20,000 parents published late last year by the Oxford Internet Institute and Cardiff University determined that there was no correlation between limiting device use and children's well-being. The study's lead author Dr Andrew Przybylski said: "Our findings suggest the broader family context, how parents set rules about digital screen time, and if they're actively engaged in exploring the digital world together, are more important than the raw screen time."

"The consensus is that screen time, in and of itself, is not harmful - and reasonable restrictions vary greatly, depending on a child's behavior and personality. There is little point in worrying about how many minutes a day your kids are spending with screens," says Brewer. "Instead, parents should be doing what they can to ensure that what they're watching, playing and reading is high-quality, age appropriate and safe---- and joining in wherever possible. ”

[21] 正确答案.A

Participation is Better than Restriction

In the digital age, media consumption is inevitable. According to Brewer, rather than restricting children's screen time and their access to digital devices, parents should be actively engaged in their children's media consumption because the nature of it matters more than the length of time spent on it. I cannot agree more with Brewer's point of view.

First of all, the use of digital products in itself is a double-edged sword. It is the way they are used, not the screen time, that determines the outcome. Digital products, if used properly, can facilitate children's study and relax their bodies and minds. By contrast, they can also be used to browse pornographic or violent contents, which is harmful to children's mental health. Therefore, parental participation and guidance are critical in that parents can help children form an appropriate view of electronic products and thus protect them from potential harm. Second, the effort to limit screen time is in vain as long as children use electronics, for instance, to consume digital junk foods. So parents should play, watch or browse with their children so as to ensure that what their children are consuming is high-quality, age appropriate and safe. This could at the same time help strengthen family bonds.

In conclusion, parents should join in with their children's media consumption rather than simply limit their time spent on electronic devices.

PASSAGE ONE

(1) Life can be tough for immigrants in America As a Romanian bank clerk in Atlanta puts it to find a good job "you have to be like a wolf in the forest - able to smell out the best meat" And if you can't find work, don't expect the taxpayer to bail you out. Unlike in some European countries, it is extremely hard for an able-bodied immigrant to live off the state. A law passed in 1996 explicitly bars most immigrants, even those with legal status, from receiving almost any federal benefits.

(2) That is one reason why America absorbs immigrants better than many other rich countries, according to a new study by the University of California. The researchers sought to measure the effect of immigration on the native-born in 20 rich countries, taking into account differences in skills between immigrants and natives, imperfect labor markets and the size of the welfare state in each country.

(3) Their results offer ammunition for fans of more open borders. In 19 out of 20 countries, the authors calculated that shutting the doors entirely to foreign workers would make the native-born worse off. Never mind what it would do to the immigrants themselves, who benefit far more than anyone else from being allowed to Cross borders to find work.

(4) The study also suggests that most countries could handle more immigration than they currently allow. In America a one-percentage point increase in the proportion of immigrants in the population made the native-born 0.05% better off The opposite was true in some countries with generous or ill-designed welfare states, however. A one-point rise in immigration made the native-born slightly worse off in Austria, Belgium, Germany, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Sweden and Switzerland. In Belgium, immigrants who lose jobs can receive almost two-thirds of their most recent wage in state benefits, which must make the hunt for a new job less urgent.

(5) None of these effects was large but the study undermines the claim that immigrants steal jobs from natives or drag down their wages. Many immigrants take jobs that Americans do not want, the study finds. This “smooths” the labor market and ultimately creates more jobs for locals. Native-owned grocery stores do better business because there are immigrants to pick the fruit they sell. Indian computer scientists help American software firms expand. A previous study found that because immigrants typically earn less than locals with similar skills, they boost corporate profits, prompting companies to grow and hire more locals.

41. Increase in immigration in Austria fails to improve locals' life mainly because of ____.
